Candace Parker one of eight to make Women's Basketball Hall

Heather Burns
USA TODAY

Lady Vols basketball legend Candace Parker was elected to the Women's Basketball Hall of Fame in her first year of eligibility on Thursday Oct. 30.

Former WNBA MVP Elena Delle Donne, Minnesota Lynx coach Cheryl Reeve, NBA analyst Doris Burke, international players Isabelle Fijalkowski and Amaya Valdemoro and Kirkwood Community College coach Kim Muhl also were elected. Barbara Kennedy-Dixon is being honored posthumously. The class will be inducted on June 27 at the Tennessee Theatre in Knoxville.

Parker, who retired in 2024, played 16 seasons in the WNBA. She was a two-time WNBA MVP, a three-time champion and a 10-time All-WNBA selection. Parker's No. 3 jersey was retired by the Los Angeles Sparks and Chicago Sky during the summer.

Parker won WNBA Rookie of the Year and MVP in 2008, the only player to accomplish the feat. She's also the only WNBA player to rank in the top 10 in career points, assists, rebounds and blocks. Parker led Tennessee to back-to-back national titles in 2007 and 2008, winning Most Outstanding Player of the Final Four both years.

Delle Donne helped the Washington

Mystics to their only title in 2019. The two-time MVP was the first in WNBA history to finish a regular season with a 50% field-goal percentage, 40% 3-point field-goal percentage and 90% free-throw percentage during that season.

Reeve, who has coached the Lynx for 16 seasons, has the most wins (364) and playoff wins (52) in WNBA history. She coached the Lynx to four championships and the U.S. women's national team to an eighth consecutive Olympic gold medal at the 2024 Paris Games.

ESPN analyst Burke, who's in the Naismith Hall of Fame, made history when she called the 2024 NBA Finals. Burke started her career as an analyst for Big East games and as the radio and TV voice of the New York Liberty.

Valdemoro won three WNBA championships with the Houston Comets, played in two Olympics for Spain and won Spanish League titles eight times.

Fijalkowski is a five-time French League champion and the all-time leading scorer in the league.

Muhl has coached for 36 seasons at Kirkwood Community College in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He has won nine NJCAA Division II championships and has a career record of 1,045-171.

Kennedy-Dixon, who played at Clemson from 1978 to 1982, scored 3,113 career points for seventh all-time in women's college basketball history. A two-time All-American, she holds ACC records for scoring, rebounds (1,252), field goals (1,349) and field-goal attempts (2,688).

Nationals near manager deal with Butera, 33

Elizabeth Flores
USA TODAY

The Washington Nationals are on the verge of finalizing a deal to bring on board Blake Butera as their manager, according to Jeff Passan of ESPN.

At 33, Butera is set to become the youngest manager in Major League Baseball in more than 50 years.

Butera has managed in the minor leagues for four seasons and spent one year as a minor league coach within the Tampa Bay Rays system. In October 2023, he was named the Rays' senior director of player development after serving as an assistant field coordinator for one year. Butera played at Boston College and was drafted by the Rays in the 35th round of the 2015 MLB draft. He played for two seasons before transitioning into a coaching role.

The Nationals have been on a quest for a manager after parting ways with Dave Martinez and president of baseball operations Mike Rizzo in July. They led the Nats to a World Series title in 2019, but Washington has finished no higher than fourth in its division since then.

Butera will become the youngest manager since Frank Quilici, who was hired by the Minnesota Twins in 1972 at the age of 31.

Billups, Rozier won't receive salaries during FBI probe

Jon Hoefling and Lorenzo Reyes
USA TODAY

It hasn't even been a week since the arrests of Portland Trail Blazers coach Chauncey Billups and Miami Heat guard Terry Rozier on federal gambling-related charges. Yet somehow the news keeps getting worse for the pair.

Neither Billups nor Rozier will receive any of their NBA salaries while they are on leave during the FBI's ongoing investigation, a person with direct knowledge of the situation confirmed to USA TODAY Sports on Oct. 29. The person spoke under the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to comment publicly on the matter.

Rozier's salary will be held in escrow. If he is eventually cleared in the federal investigation, he will receive all missed payments in full, while Billups' leave will be unpaid.

ESPN was first to report the news.

This decision has sparked outrage from the National Basketball Players Association, while the attorneys for both Billups and Rozier have denied any involvement with the gambling operations being investigated.

Will this affect spending and salary caps?

Although Rozier will no longer receive installments of his $26.6 million salary, the first of which Rozier was set to receive later this week, the Heat will not receive any sort of salary cap benefits as a result.

The Associated Press reports that the NBA has provisions in its latest collective bargaining agreement (CBA) that, under special circumstances such as this, allow the league to withhold salary from a player and instead put the money in an interest-bearing account for safekeeping while the investigation progresses.

Billups, meanwhile, will simply be on unpaid leave. He signed a multiyear extension in April.

The Players Association is concerned with the NBA's decision to withhold Rozier's salary. The union released a statement announcing it would be filing a grievance on Rozier's behalf:

Coach Chauncey Billups was put on immediate unpaid leave by the Trail Blazers after his arrest last week.

JAIME VALDEZ/MAGN IMAGES

"While we are in agreement with the league that upholding the integrity of the game is of the utmost importance, their decision to place Terry on leave without pay is counter to the presumption of innocence and inconsistent with the terms of our Collective Bargaining Agreement."

The statement continued, "We plan to challenge their decision via the proper channels."

Will Rozier get his money back?

Should Rozier be cleared of the charges and reinstated into the NBA, he could receive all of his missed payments back in full.

Whether he gets any of the money will hinge on the results of his legal case.

Rozier is not only facing charges regarding the illegal gambling operations being investigated by the FBI, but according to ESPN, he is also facing an $8,218,211 federal income tax lien filed in November 2023.

Rozier's attorney, Jim Trusty, says Rozier does not owe that money.

Trusty told ESPN on Wednesday, "He owed $9,000 of the total $8 million in taxes from 2021, and it has been paid. We just need the IRS to help remove the now-defunct lien. ... Terry never owed anyone $8 million."

ESPN writes that Trusty was unable to answer follow-up questions on the matter.

'A powerful slap to the Taliban's face'

Afghan women's team returns to FIFA play

Ciaran O'Mahony and Bianca Roberts

Special to USA TODAY

Afghan goaltender Fatima Yousufi stepped on the field at Berrechid Municipal Stadium in Morocco on Oct. 26 for a historic comeback more than four years in the making.

This wasn't just a game. Not after enduring years of exile after fleeing Afghanistan amid the Taliban's takeover. Not after an eleventh-hour relocation of this tournament – the 2025 FIFA Unites Women's Series was originally scheduled to be played in Dubai – because UAE visas for the Afghan team were not approved. Not after finally finding a voice with FIFA as a refugee team.

Yousufi said she and her teammates – known as Afghan Women United – felt more pressure than ever in an international tournament. It was a major step in their collective fight to be recognized as a national team. But Mursal Sadat, who plays centerback, said it was also about showcasing the strength of Afghan women and what they can achieve even under the most devastating circumstances.

"Everyone was telling me, 'We won't get it,'" Sadat told USA TODAY Sports about their fight for an Afghan team. "But I said, 'We will still fight this fight, because it's not about us, it's about all the women in our country. It's about being a voice for them.'

"It's a matter of gender equality ... for every woman and girl around the world."

Friendly matches for most national teams are an informal, preparatory part of the sporting calendar. But for the newly established Afghan Women United team, the FIFA Unites Tournament Oct. 26-Nov. 1 in Morocco marked a moment of great geopolitical – and personal – significance. The four-team tournament allowed the Afghan players to contest their first games against international opposition since they fled their country in 2021, evading oppression from the Taliban, which banned women's sports after returning to power after the withdrawal of American forces.

"It has a very big meaning for us," Yousufi said. "It's going to be a big message ... a powerful slap to the Taliban's face, that we're unstoppable."

The round-robin tournament tested the mettle of the fledgling Afghan refugee team, which lost to Chad 6-1 and Tunisia 4-0 before posting an emphatic 7-0 victory in their final match against Libya.

But an overarching victory was secured before the first whistle, according to Yousufi, earned by virtue of the team's mere existence.

Afghan goalie Fatima Yousufi runs toward her teammates to celebrate after scoring their first goal during the FIFA Unites Women's Series 2025.

ABEDEL MAJID BZIOUAT/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

"There were a lot of sacrifices to just make it this far," Yousufi said. "I'm just so glad right now that (after) all our hard work ... we have this result."

Reflecting on Afghan Women United's historic debut, captain Fatima Haidari said there was "a real mix of emotions" among her teammates.

"I cried because we are back after many years, after all the moments that we suffered out of Afghanistan, far from our families ... but we are still here," said Haidari, who lives in Italy. "We are fighting, and we had that spirit to be together and to strongly go ahead and just play the match."

Four-year journey back to the pitch

The Afghan players have been in exile since August 2021. More than half of the team resettled in Australia, while others found safety in European countries.

High-profile female athletes were a major target of the Islamic fundamentalist movement as it swiftly set about introducing over 70 decrees across the country that restricted women's rights to sport, education, employment and freedom of movement in public.

"When the Taliban arrived, everything just vanished," Yousufi said. "The (football) dream ... everything changed to survival mode."

"Every day, we were seeing the news that an athlete was killed by the Taliban, a politician was killed by the Taliban, a reporter was killed by the Taliban."

Prominent sportswomen across the country were encouraged to destroy all evidence of their sporting identities.

"I was supposed to burn my jersey and my medals ... I couldn't do it," Yousufi said. "I started to dig a hole in the backyard, and I just ... buried my memories, my sacrifices, my hard work and just trying to be a nobody."

She thought at the time: "I'm just deleting myself. I did that to be safe, to just save my family, my teammates – everyone."

Yousufi will never forget the four perilous days spent at Kabul Airport, waiting to escape via emergency visas arranged by FIFPRO and the Australian government.

"I myself got beaten by the Taliban during that time," she said. "I just escaped them, and I made my way to the gates. And my family got beaten by the Taliban. It was so bad."

Evacuation enabled the safety of the players, but the ongoing threat of reprisal remained for family members left behind.

"There was a day that my mom called me in a hurry, and she told me that the Taliban was here," Yousufi said. "They searched our house. They made such a big mess around. They even dug up the yards."

"My parents at that time; they were so scared."

FIFA pathway restores Afghan team

Participation in international soccer tournaments is a politically charged area of bureaucracy.

While sovereignty of state-level decision-makers – such as the Taliban-controlled Afghan Football Federation – is technically mandated, mounting criticism from the international community and targeted advocacy by the Sport and Rights Alliance and Human Rights Watch propelled FIFA to take unprecedented action in recognizing Afghan Women United.

This is the first time football's world governing body has established a team in defiance of a national football association.

"It was so important for us to keep this title and to have the team back again ... to just not let the Taliban win this," Yousufi said.

Speaking after the 4-0 loss to Tunisia, Sadat said, "It's more than football for us."

"We didn't care about the result. We just cared about lifting up each other. We've got to be true leaders and show the girls in Afghanistan that despite the result, despite the winning or losing, you're going to be a champion," said Sadat, who along with many of her teammates lives in Australia and plays professionally for Melbourne Victory FC AWT. The last three letters standing for Afghan Women's Team, which has a partnership with the Australian club Melbourne Victory.

"The AWT competes in Football Victoria's competitive leagues where they have recently secured back-to-back promotions and will next season be in the Women's State League 2," Melbourne Victory's website reads. "In addition to supporting their sporting life, Melbourne Victory is committed to supporting players' social and cultural lives. This involves investment in support structures providing health and well-being, education and employment."

FIFA President Gianni Infantino, who was in attendance, congratulated Afghan Women United's debut on the international stage as, "The beginning of a beautiful, beautiful story that you are writing for yourselves, for your families, for so many girls and women all over the world."

Yousufi hopes the organization will continue to support the team's ambitions. But for her, the most important thing is inspiring Afghan women who feel hopeless.

"I know it's so hard to tell them, 'Do not give up' ... (But) those girls in Afghanistan should dream, because those dreams (are) going to scare the Taliban," Yousufi said. "They should not give up on their dreams, because that's what the Taliban wants."
